

Defending the Unborn: A Call to Protect Life

3-minute read

Today, I stand before you to speak on an issue that lies at the very heart of our values, our faith, and the future of humanity—the sanctity of life, particularly the life of the unborn. Every life, from its very first moment of conception, is a gift from God, and it is our responsibility to protect and cherish that gift.

In Psalm 139:13-14, the Psalmist declares, “For you formed my inward parts; you knitted me together in my mother’s womb. I praise you, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made.” These words remind us that life is not accidental or arbitrary; each life is intentionally created by God. From the moment of conception, a unique human being begins to form, designed with purpose and care. The womb is not a place of mere biology, but a sacred space where God’s handiwork comes to life.

Every unborn child is a reflection of the divine image, and every heartbeat, every cell division, and every moment of growth in the womb is a testimony to God’s intricate design. The Bible affirms that God knows us even before we are born—before we take our first breath. In Jeremiah 1:5, God says to the prophet, “Before I formed you in the womb, I knew you, before you were born, I set you apart.” This truth applies to every child, born and unborn alike. God knows each one, has a plan for each one, and loves each one with an eternal love.

As we consider the importance of protecting the unborn, we must also recognize that society’s duty to defend life extends beyond the womb. When we allow unborn children to be discarded, we not only violate the sanctity of life but also undermine the very foundation of human dignity. If we, as a nation, are willing to dismiss the most vulnerable among us, how can we claim to honor and protect the lives of those who are already born?

But protecting the unborn is not simply a matter of law—it is a moral obligation. Proverbs 24:11-12 urges us to “Rescue those being led away to death; hold back those staggering toward slaughter.” Every child in the womb is a life to be saved, a person to be protected. We are called to speak for those who cannot speak for themselves, to defend those who have no voice in this world.

This is a call to action. It is not enough to merely speak about the importance of life; we must act. We must support laws that protect the unborn, volunteer at pregnancy resource centers, and offer compassion and support to mothers in need. Most importantly, we must be a voice of truth in a world that often fails to recognize the dignity of every life.

Let us stand firm in our commitment to protect the life of every child, and let us pray for the wisdom and courage to be advocates for those who cannot yet speak for themselves.

I stand before you today to speak about the sanctity of life, especially the life of the unborn. From the moment of conception, each life is a gift from God, created with purpose and care. As Psalm 139:13-14 reminds us, "For you formed my inward parts; you knitted me together in my mother's womb. I praise you, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made." Every unborn child is a reflection of God's image, and He knows each of us before we are born (Jeremiah 1:5).

The call to protect life is not just a matter of law, but of moral responsibility. Proverbs 24:11-12 urges us to "Rescue those being led away to death." We are called to defend the most vulnerable, speaking for those who cannot speak for themselves.

This is a call to action. We must support life-affirming laws, volunteer at pregnancy centers, and offer compassion to mothers in need. Let us be strong advocates for the unborn, standing firm in our commitment to protect every precious life.
